Overview

I believe everyone has a right to healthy and affordable housing. At Klein Hornig, I have the unique opportunity to closely work with diverse stakeholders, such as developers and housing authorities, who build, and tenant organizations, who live in affordable housing, to create homes and communities where families can grow and thrive for generations to come.

Chhaya Kotwani serves developers, public housing authorities, and tenant organizations in an array of affordable housing matters in Massachusetts and nationwide.

Clients turn to Chhaya for her experience representing tenant organizations within the context of public housing developments. During her career in legal services, Chhaya gained valuable experience in troubleshooting the day-to-day challenges faced by tenants and communities as they transitioned from public housing to mixed-income communities. She worked in close collaboration with tenants, housing authorities, and developers to develop key development and post-closing operational documents related to relocation, tenant selection, management, and occupancy and facilitated meaningful resident engagement and participation during the redevelopment process.
